Music by the African composer Halim El-Dabh, was a famous composer and ethnomusicologist known throughout all of Africa. He travelled to many countries in Africa and collected recordings of folk music from many the various tribes. At some point he worked with the Smithsonian on this project as well.

Later in life, Halim composed some of his music by creating paintings. The performer would interpret the colors and shapes in Halim's paintings like reading music. He had a condition known as synesthesia where he associated a certain color for each musical note.
